

Courtney's Tattoo

By: Mallory Erickson

Courtney Hauser, a student at Perry High School, has her very own tattoo; not many people have their own tattoo in high school. She got her first tattoo when she was 17 years old. Courtney has one tattoo that is located on her wrist; it is a peanut but her tattoo is with no color, only black lines. She got the idea of having a peanut on her wrist because that was what her family called her when she was younger.

Courtney does recommend getting a tattoo, but some of her advice was to think about getting one thoroughly first, because at first she didn't know if she wanted it for sure. She was thinking over quarantine and decided to go for it, but she also didn't end up eating before she got it. Once she got one she said, "it turns out to be a really cool experience to go through to get one." Courtney got the idea of getting one during quarantine and was bored over the summer. Courtney did not get forced into getting one, it was all her decision to get her own, her parents didn't really care

I asked Courtney if she would ever think about getting more tattoos in her future, she told me that she does want to get one more tattoo for fun, the kind she wants is a little ghost on her ankle. She also would like the same kind: no color, only black lines. She doesn't know why she wants to get this one, she just thought it would be fun to have another small one because it was a fun experience to go through to get one.
